A BEAUTIFUL POEM.

The fire of the genius which lit up the nature of Colonel Reale, who recently committed suicide in Oakland, Cal., glows in lambent flame in the following lines from his pen, entitled "Indirection," which appeared in the October number of the Atlantic. Reale was long associated with the Free-State movement in Kansas, and was with John Brown in his raid on Harper's Ferry.

Fair are the flowers and the children, but but their subtle suggestion is fairer; Rare is the rosebud of dawn, but the secret that clasps it is rarer; Sweet the exultation of song, but the strain that precedes it is sweeter; And never was poetry of wit, but the meaning outmastered the meter.

Never a daisy that grows, but a mystery gulldeth the growing; Never a river that flows, but a majesty seethers the flowing; Never a Shakespeare that soars, but a stronger than he unfold him; Nor ever a prophet foretells, but a mightier seer hath foretold him.

Back of the canvas that throbs the painter is hunted and hidden; Into the statue that breathes the soul of the sculptor is hidden; Under the joy that is felt by the infinite issues of feeling; Crowning the glory revealed is the glory that crowns the revealing.

Great are the symbols of being, but that which is symbolized is greater; Vast the create and behold, but vaster the inward creator; Back of the sound broods the silence, back of the gift stand the giving; Back of the hand that receives thrill the sensitive nerves of receiving.

Space is as nothing to spirit, the deed is outdone by doing; The heart of the wood is warm, but warmer the heart of the wooing; And up from the pits where those shiver, and up from the heights where those slumber, Twin voices and shadows swim starward, and the essence of life is divine.

THE FUTURE IMPERIAL FAMILY OF GERMANY.

Mrs. Hooper in the Baltimore American.

And speaking of watering-places, I have been told that none of them have done well this year owing to the counter attraction of the exhibition, thus proving the truth of the reverse of the saying, that it is an ill wind that blows nobody any good. The exception to this rule has been Hombourg, which has been very full and very animated for a European watering place. It was graced moreover by the presence of royalty, in the shape of the crown prince and princess of Germany, the Princess of Mary of Cambridge (the duchess of Teck), the grand duke of Mecklenburg, and some lesser lights. The crown prince and princess, with their children, led a life of exceeding simplicity and domesticity. The young scions of German imperialism used to go out riding sundry small donkeys—that is to say, that half the little princes and princesses rode, while their mother and the other half, who had no donkeys, ran after the riders to keep up with them. Evidently the Princess Victoria is following in the footsteps of her mother as regards the domestic training of her children. One day the imperial party started for a drive up the Salzberg, and when quite near the summit their carriage broke down. What was to be done? The distance was too great to allow of walking, and to send one of the servants on one of the carriage horses down to Hombourg for another carriage would incur a long and, for the children, a perhaps injurious delay. However, the prince was on the point of dispatching his messenger, when a peasant passed, driving an immense hay-wagon. Instantly realizing the situation, and recognizing the imperial party, he sprang from his seat and implored them to make him the proudest and happiest farmer in all Germany by getting into his wagon and permitting him to drive them home. The royal pair laughed and consented. The whole party were accommodated with seats amid the fragrant hay, and in this guise the future emperor and empress of Germany, with their "august offspring," as the papers call the little princes and princesses, came riding back to the swellest watering-place in all Germany.

A peculiar incident occurred at Columbus, Nebraska, a few months since. It was on the day the memorable cyclone passed over Lone Tree and Clark's. The sky was streaked in the northwest with vivid flashes of light, and a terrible rumbling sound made known that a dreadful storm was imminent. A massive black cloud was extending a whirling finger toward the earth and sweeping with great fury whatever came before it. Jennie—a girl who was working at a tain hotel there—was busy at the stove preparing for the next meal. Hearing a rattle at the side door, Jennie went to the door and opened it. As she did so she was caught from the doorway by the whirling wind and carried over the house, turning round and round in the air as she went, and after approaching the ground on the other side she again arose, and was taken by the whirling wind over the stores and dwellings a distance of three-fourths of a mile, being lowered so that her feet could touch the ground as many as eight times during the trip. Exhausted, but in an erect position, she was at last lowered to the earth as lightly as a feather would fall, having received no material injury, though almost frantic with fright. The storm proceeded on its way, leaving her in sight of the town, and in half an hour she again put in an appearance at the hotel, where anxious friends were bewailing her sudden and mysterious departure.

We have gotten regard Japan as so far and so safely along the pathway of civilization, that it is almost as great a shock to hear that they have been torturing rebellious soldiers over there to make them confess to some trumped up crime, as if Russia or Mexico had been caught at the same barbarous practice. There is a good deal of torturing done to make unfortunates admit the truth of lies patched up against them, all over the world, among the civilized and uncivilized alike, but the Japanese ought to have learned enough by this time to do the thing in a more civilized way. They might have framed a commission de lunatico inquirendo, as the lawyers put it, and shut these soldiers in a mad house, tied up in a straight jacket. That is the way a civilized people do sometimes, at any rate, with rich relations, who are slow about dying and turning over their fortunes, and there are a thousand like ways of doing the same thing that the society of this day is accustomed to; but the old fashioned rack, thumb-screws, and similar devices have gone out of use, and Japan ought to give them up.

A late Laramie dispatch says: Last night a coach-driver from the north reported that on his trip north from here Friday night he was stopped at the Platte river ford, about a mile from this post, by five masked men who took from the coach two prisoners, Mansfield and McLaughlin, and hung them on a large cottonwood tree on the river bank. These men were charged with road agency and had been in custody in Cheyenne, and were en route for Deadwood, under guard of Jim May and Jesse Brown, whom the lynchers compelled to give up their arms and surrender the prisoners. At daylight the next morning M. L. Green, deputy coronor, rode to the scene and found the bodies still there, one hanging and the other one on the ground. They were back to Laramie, and a coronor's jury empanelled.

There was a prize for the prettiest girl at a ball in Gold City, Montana, and the delicate question was to be decided by a committee. The choice was generally conceded to lie between Miss McGowan and Miss Burt, and one being a blonde and the other a brunette, the committee was unable to judge of their charms by comparison. The suspense was trying to the tempers of the rival beauties, and they fell to criticising each other's looks. Then they quarrelled; next they fought. When they were parted Miss McGowan's face was scratched as though she had been thrown into a bramble bush, and one of Miss Burt's eyes was swollen and nearly shut. That episode relieved the committee of embarrassment, for neither of the two young women was any longer pretty, and the prize was awarded to another.

A party were playing cards, in Paris, when all of a sudden the game was interrupted, angry words passed and the players arose: "See here, you're holding altogether too many aces."

"What do you say, sir?" "I say you are a swindler."

"I will call you to account for this unpardonable insult."

"I am at your service at any time."

"Here is my card, sir." (Throws down, by mistake, another ace which he draws from his pocket.)

A coquette is a rosebud from which each young beau plucks a leaf, and the thorns are left for the husband.
